When a person has an idea, he takes out a blank white sheet of paper to write it down. Less daunting than blank canvas, blank computer screen, blank gallery white wall, paper is a democratic medium, informal, intended for drafts - and often the confetti of unrealized ambition. Every once in awhile, someone's idea sticks.

1969 presents an exuberant, wild exhibition of works on paper. I have an idea! is culled from individual artists, fellow gallerists, recommendations from collectors, and the random sighting of paper thumb-tacked on an artist's studio wall.
